

Verizon Center

Arena title	Verizon Center
Capacity	18,277
About	Verizon Center , formerly known as the MCI Center, is a sports and entertainment arena in Washington, D.C. Named after its sponsor, the telecommunications company Verizon Communications, the Verizon Center has been nicknamed the "Phone Booth" by local fans, because of its historical association with various telecommunications companies, such as MCI Inc. and Verizon. Located in the Chinatown neighborhood of Washington, D.C., the Verizon Center sits atop the Gallery Place rapid transit station of the Washington Metro.
Logo	 The logo for Verizon Center, featuring a red checkmark symbol to the left of the text "verizon Center" in a bold, black, sans-serif font.
Photo	 A photograph of the Verizon Center arena in Washington, D.C. The building is a large, modern structure with a curved facade and extensive glass windows. A large billboard on the left side of the building displays a black and white image of a man's face and the text "YOU WILL OBEY" and "09.26.08". A vertical sign on the building reads "體育中心" (Sports Center) in Chinese characters. Below the main entrance, there is a "GEICO" sign and a banner for "R-09 Taking Chai" from "The Washington Post". The street in front of the arena shows traffic, including a yellow taxi and a red bus, under a cloudy sky.